pendant l'été je trainais avec eux dehors (.) c'est genre "oui je suis bien là et tout . (Laura)

during the summer I hung out with them outside (.) it's like "yes I'm there alright and stuff"

The shared meanings of like in its different syntactic categories produce a “syntactic-semantic field” of mutually overlapping and reciprocally reinforcing functions that are relevant to the emergence of the quotative function (Buchstaller 2001)

Many forms used as quotatives are “notoriously polyfunctional outside the quotative frame” (Güldemann 2001)

The discourse marker use increases the frequency of genre, therefore increasing its chance of being used in a new way (de Smet 2016)

Entry into the quotative system

Content of the quote is a classic factor affecting the use of BE LIKE (Tagliamonte and D'Arcy 2007)

internal thought

je me suis dit ‘ça c'est pas lui’

I thought “that's not him”

hypothetical quotes

on dirait des gamins genre “non j'ai pas deux ans” (Letitia)

you'd think they were kids like “no I'm not two years old”

non-lexicalised sound

moi j'ai failli vomir j'étais comme ça <vomiting noises> (Elisa)

I was almost sick I was like this <vomiting noises>

direct speech

après j'ai dit " non vas-y laisse tomber" (Letitia)

then I said “no go on drop it”

Two language changes

(1) Grammaticalisation of genre

noun > preposition > adverb > discourse marker > discourse particle > filler

(2) Emergence of a quotative function for genre

- now polyfunctional
- with an appropriate syntactic-semantic field

Emergence of dramatised style of quoting:

New forms for:

- mimetic quotes
- non-lexicalised quotes
- what someone might have said or might say
